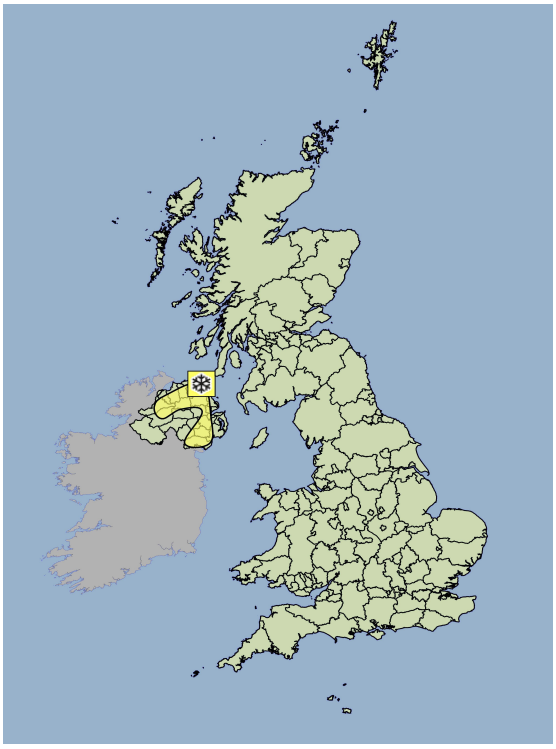
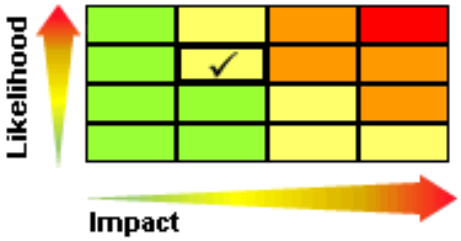
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Showers will become more organised and widespread across Northern Ireland during Tuesday night. Many of the showers will fall as rain or sleet at low levels and snow over high ground, but intensity is critical with an increasing risk of very localised snow accumulating at lower levels.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 02:00 on Wed, 20th Mar 2013 until 09:00 on Wed, 20th Mar 2013

Showers of rain and snow will become more frequent and heavier during the early hours of Wednesday morning. The showers falling as rain at low levels and snow on higher ground, but this snow falling to low levels in some of the heavier outbreaks. Accumulations of snow will be very variable, but local accumulations of around 5 cm are likely on roads, chiefly above 100 metres.

The public should be aware of possible travel disruption.
